

Proposal Process Description

Sales Manager: The first thing I do is refer to the Sales Manual and the template library to decide what type of proposal is required. I may consult with the Admin.

Admin: I select the appropriate template from our template library to create the proposal document, then I use our CRM system to populate it with data about the prospect. I consult with the Sales Manager if I need assistance.

Sales Rep: When I receive the document from the Admin, I do two things: I update the boilerplate text in the document and write new text that's unique to this prospect. In both cases, I often refer to the Sales Manual and the Price Book. As I add new text, I use our style guide and contact the Sales Manager if I have any questions. Next, I use the Price Book to select pricing for the proposal, being sure to include relevant discounts, if any. Finally, I send the document to the Sales Manager for approval.

Sales Manager: If everything looks good and the pricing is inline with our Price Book, I forward the proposal to our Admin. However, if I don't like part of the proposal or need additional information, I'll send the document back to the Sales Rep to make the necessary changes.

Admin: When I get the proposal, I check it against company guidelines in the Sales Manual to determine whether a pricing override is required. If one is required, I forward the proposal to the VP of Sales. If the proposal looks good, I send it the Rep for one last look.

VP Sales: I validate the pricing against guidelines in the Sales Manual and data in the Price Book. If I approve the override, I send the proposal to the Sale Rep to be finalized. If I reject the override, I return the proposal to the Sales Rep.

Sales Rep: If my proposal is rejected for any reason, I make the necessary changes and send it to the Sales Manger again. However, when my proposal has been approved, I add the finishing touches and send it to the Admin for delivery.

Admin: With a finished document in hand, I either email it to the appropriate people or print copies and make suitable delivery arrangements.
